

ABSTRACT

A rolled towel (or any other roll of sheets), such as a paper towel roll, construction to facilitate the use of sheets from said rolled towel as placemats and napkins. The construction comprises including a plurality of lines of weakness alternating distances apart along at least a portion of the length of, for instance, the paper towel roll such that the roll comprises sheets of alternating sizes. The alternating sizes correspond, at least roughly, to the size of a placemat and the size of a napkin. Printing on the sheets can optionally be used to more readily define the perforations and thereby facilitate accurate separation, and can optionally be used anywhere on the sheets for aesthetic purposes.